WHEREAS, the discovery and development of one's talents for the good of society is essential to personal fulfillment, and the right to choose one's occupation is a basic American freedom; and

WHEREAS, the structure of occupations and industries is changing so rapidly and radically that most individuals will make one or more occupational changes in their lifetimes; and

WHEREAS, vocational guidance has proved to be a vital bridge between the increasingly complex world of work and the individual's need to select, locate and train for employment that is congenial and rewarding.
